“A mentoring relationship is a close, individualized relationship that develops over time between a graduate student and a faculty member (or others) that includes both caring and guidance.”

(from U of Michigan Graduate Handbook)

MENTORING & MENTORS

Types Of Mentoring And Mentoring Roles

Advisors, Supporters, Tutors, "Masters," Sponsors, Models

Finding And Choosing Mentors

Start with self-appraisal

Identify potential faculty

Initiate contact, provide dossier* & investigate possibilities; follow up

* See reverse for dossier suggestions

Seek out multiple mentors as needed (for specific expertise, alternative strategies, second opinions, etc. / think "outside the box," e.g., virtual mentors)

EXPECTATIONS & RESPONSIBILITIES

What To Expect (And Require) From Mentors

Availability for interaction

Effective communication (and listening!)

Advice, guidance

Research direction

Feedback

Initiation into “the discipline”

What Mentors Expect And Need From You

Responsibility, knowledge of degree requirements & policies

(be aware of all relevant Departmental, Graduate College, and University policies)

Initiative and commitment

Ability to receive criticism, heed advice

Communication of progress on a regular basis

Resourcefulness in seeking expertise (take advantage of all committee members, etc.)

Respect of mentor’s time demands

Scholarly discourse!

STRATEGIES FOR A SUCCESSFUL MENTORING EXPERIENCE

Communication Is Key

Update, clarify, initiate, summarize, follow-up, get/give feedback, remind tactfully

Avoid Mentoring Pitfalls

Know yourself, appreciate roles, accept input, use tact, seek advocates if needed

Safeguards: (1) know policies & get it in writing; (2) keep copies

Address crises, reassess timeline, change mentor if necessary

Maintain An Ethical Mentoring Milieu

Value diversity; foster collegiality

Avoid departmental politics

Ask questions & encourage discussion on ethics issues

Respect boundaries (hierarchical, time, sexual, etc.)

TOWARD SELF-MENTORING

Knowing yourself helps to deal with advice overload & conflicting recommendations

The 4 R's: Record, Remind, Reflect, Refine

SUGGESTIONS FOR WHAT TO PUT IN YOUR DOSSIER FOR A POTENTIAL MENTOR:

- Curriculum vita (contact info, education, employment, experience, skills – focus on academic info)
- Statement of goals (e.g., why pursuing a graduate degree, career aims, research interests, copy of grad application essay, etc.)
- Course transcripts (or list of courses taken or planned; draft of Plan of Study form, etc.)
- Other useful information (e.g., abstracts, papers, summary of thesis work, etc.)
